BIRTH. On the 27th June, at Foodbow, Mrs. B.

. Hongkong, July 5th, 1875. Tue Chinese emigrants to North Australia are, according to all accounts, thriving. To some it has proved an indubitable El Dorado; others have met with temporary disappointprosper ultimately. A great many have bought town allotments and established themselves as traders and shopkcepers, and Cooktown is likely soon to bear more resenblance to a Chinese than an English town. The Chinese are indeed reported to have said that they will speedily convert Cooktown into a little Canton, and as they have a good deal of money and are the principal builders to accomplish this purpose. Their ever inin the minds of the European settlers, but the general feeling is favourable to them. The climate is rather too hot for Europeans: it suits the Chinamen admirably. It is to be hoped that they will not confine their attention to the goldfields or the town; a good deal of wealth may be secured by trying the -capabilities of the virgin soil. For instance rice and sugar might both be successfully cultivated by them, and in course of time probably will. Most of the Chinese emigrants have been well provided for in starteach man, we are told, and this, of course, will last some time. But by and bye they will be attracted to the cultivation of the soil. either by necessity or for the sake of gain. One great complaint is preferred against the Chinese entigrants, and t comes from all sides. They do not take their wives with do so, as the trip was experimental; others, it is to be supposed, because they did not intend to remain. But in any case the same bad results remain. Great evils follow from such a condition of things, the Chineso become demoralised, discontented, and prone to crime. It is most desirable, therefore, that they should send for their wives and the arrival of one Chinese woman, per steamer Brisbane, but she was such a rara avis mail steamer China. But though apprehension on this score was thus quieted the British residents in China bave been far been delegated to the post, who had? was the natural query constantly put, but never satisfactorily answered. There was unaccountable dolay in making the appointment, and some people began to think that the Government of Poking intended to cast slight upon Great Britain, and add insult to injury. The brief telegram we published on Saturday will serve to dissipate this notion wherever it existed. The brother of the Viceroy In Hung Chang has been selected for the duty, and his rank is sufficiently high to prevent the suspicion of anything derogatory to our dignity being intended by the commander in the service of the Pacific Mail Chinese Authorities. In this sense we note the appointment with satisfaction, though there is still ground for suspicion that it has been tardily and reluctantly decided upon. If a concession has to be submitted to, it four hours, in lat. 30 N., long. 72 W. should always be made with a good grace, or it loses most of its value. My Dear Friends,-You so overwhelmed me on the evening of the 2nd of May with me then in any way to express my thanks to you for the very bandsome Bible which you gave me. As I examined it more closely, and found how beautifully it was illustrated, and also discovered the many book markers (to me not the least beautiful of the illustrationa) danger of drifting on to the Nine Islands, this felt that you had put it quits out of my power to express in any way my thanks to you. It is only now in this feeble way that I bope to reach all who have contributed to that memorial of our mutual joys, during the cleven days when it pleased God to bring us together. My great joy is to know that "Insamuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye did unto Me." says our Lord. So Jesus bas par taken of your gift. Shortly beyond Andresselles, the coast is rocky, and becomes more ruzged and steep as the Cape is approached. Some 200 yards round the Cape, and east of the lighthouse, is a narrow beach, at the head of which is the small fishing hamlet of Grienez. It is a spot well sheltered from the south and west winds, which prevail four-fifths of the year. This spot was selected by Captain Boyton for entering the water. There being no auberge at Grience, arrangements were made at the neighbouring village of Franzelle for a room where he could take a few hours' rest last night after his passage from Boulogne-to Grisnez. Captain Boyton brought with him to Boulogue a screw propeller which, it was said, he was likely to use in his Channel passage. It consists of a steel hoop on inch wide and a quarter of an inch thick, which fits round the waist outside the life-saving dress. CURRENTS OF AIR WITHIN CYCLONES AND WATER SPOUTS.

In a memoir on evelones, and water-spouts. Monthez publishes some observations made by him while upon the ocun, and which, if correct, are quite important. According to him, at or meanths surface of the ground the movement of air in the cyclone is always from below opward, while in whithwinds the movement is, on the contrary, from above downward. In the former case the wieds are winds of aspiration; in the latter the wind descends from the loud in the form of a bag, or tube, which terminates in a point. He believes that waterspouts have no relation whatever to cyclones having an apposite appearance and cause. In this opinion Renou also concurs.

Extracts. AN ANXIVERSARY. In a chamber old and oaken, In a faint and faltering way, Half a dozen words were apakon. Just eleven years ago to-day, What was bound and what was broken

Let a woman's conscience say. Half a dozen words excited. Whispered by a lover's side; bluff delighted, half affrighted Half in pleasure, half in pride; And a maiden's troth is plighted, ·And a false love-knot is fied. Has a maiden not a feeling That can swell, and sing, and soar? Came not o'er her spirit stealing

Thoughts of things that were before? lu-her heart did not revenling Tell her love was something more! Barely half a dozen glauces, Half in carnest, half in mirth-Pive or six, or seven dances-What is such a wooing worth? Courtship in which no remance is Curnot give a true love birth. Passion is a pain and power Slowly growing unto might

By long vigils, not the hour; Real love is not at sight; 'Tis a weed; 'tis not a flower That arises in a night. Lightly is the twomise spoken, Lightly is the love-knot lied : And the maid redcems the token Living at her husband's side; And her heart-it is not heaken.

- Hat it is not in its pride. -With the years shall come a feeling Never, may be, felt before; shall find her heart concealing Wants it did not know of yore; mtly the truth revealing, Real love is something more.

MACREADY. Mr. Macrondy survived his retirement fromthe stage more than twenty-two years, which he spent first at Cherborne, and afterwards at Cheltenham, where he died on the 27th April, 1873. It was his fate to see many of prost of his children, preceded him to the grave. He married most happily a second time in 1860. Removed from the stage and its jealousies, all his fine qualities had from scope; and we think now with pleasure of his generable and noble bond, as we saw it last in 1872, and of the sweet smile of his beautiful mouth, which spoke of the calm wisdom of a gentle and thoughtful old mge_ We have reason to know that looked back with yearning fendness to the studies and pursuits which had made him famous. The fretful jeakhusies, the passionate wilfulness of the old times seem to have faded into the dim past, and no longer marrod the memory of kindness dine and loyal service rendered to him. He had done much good work in the sphere which Providence had assigned him, and we believe had learned to know that it was not for him to repine if "the Divinity that shapes our ends had so shaped his that his work was to be accomplished upon the stage. It is of the man as we then saw him, the man whom we had known as a highly-cultivated and essentially kind-hearted gentleman, that we would rether think, than of the actor with all his weaknesses cruelly laid bare, whom these

THE LATE SIR ARTHUR HELPS. Next to humanity the object of Sir Arthur's greatest reverence was its most direct emanation—a book. His acquaintance with books was enormous. He read rapidly, for his power of attention was absolute; and he remembered what he read for that same reason.
